- Organic sultanas market under pressure: scarce supply, rising prices

Frost, heat, hail – why action is needed now

Organic sultana production in Turkey is facing considerable challenges this year. Frosty nights, the likes of which have not been seen in decades, hit the organic sultana region of Manisa hard this spring. With temperatures dropping to -30 degrees, the sensitive vines suffered during their crucial growth phase. The result: significantly lower yields! High temperatures and hail have further exacerbated the situation. Many producers are holding back their goods, and prices are already rising noticeably.

One thing is clear for the coming months: there will be fewer new organic sultanas – and competition for available quantities is growing.

Secure goods from our remaining stocks now, while they are still available. Fill your warehouses and protect yourself from further price increases and supply bottlenecks.

Act now – before others do!
